Logistics Planning

(1) The Office of Logistics was able to support cold war contingency operations because of its programmed procurement, rehabilitation, and packaging of paramilitary materiel. During the reporting period, new specifications reduced the average weight of aerial delivery containers from 200 lbs. to 75 lbs. This is a vital consideration when receiving para-drops. Also, a system was developed which increased the number and types of equipment which could be considered

from 400 to 40
(2) The Agency increased the number of Agency peculiar items offered to the Army for post D-Day use. Negotiations are under way to cut reaction time for release of these items in an emergency.
